STATEMENT OF JAYMEE

When I read the apology from the General I felt relieved because I knew that the Army was beginning to own up to their mistakes and take the escape seriously.

I am very thankful, but an apology isn't going to be enough. We want changes in what they do in the future and consequences for those whose actions resulted in my family and myself having to live in fear while the nationwide manhunt went on and the suspect was a fugitive for one long week.
